NYU Press. Hardcover. Condition: New. 353 pages. Dimensions: 9.1in. x 6.1in. x 1.5in. View the Table of Contents. Read the Prologue. An exceptionally well written, well documented, fast-moving account. Washington Times This is a book written on multiple levels, and well worth reading. M. S. Naval Institute Proceedings This book is a welcome addition to the history of naval aviation and fills a much-needed void by detailing the later years of the Vietnam naval air campaign. Sea Power Makes for lively, vivid, and informative reading. I would include it. . . on my list of the top ten books on the air war in Vietnam. Air Power History John Sherwood has done a fine job in giving us a first-rate account of a confusing but critically important period in Naval Aviation history. The Hook As a collection of individual studies and war stories, Afterburner should find an interested readership. Military History With a 45-degree dive angle set, 450 knots of airspeed building, and my altimeter unwinding like crazy, my scan went rapidly between the bombsight and flight instruments. . . . When I looked over my shoulder at the target, I could see where the bombs had hit and exploded. Through stories like this diary entry of a fighter pilot, John Darrell Sherwood brings forth the personal accounts of 21 naval and marine aviators in this chronicle of the second half of the Navys air war over Vietnam. Despite spending over 200 billion dollars and dropping almost 8 million tons of bombs on Southeast Asia, the U. S. was unable to score a definitive victory in the air war. Afterburner takes us inside the day-to-day operations of the air war, particularly during the most intense year of the campaign: 1972. During that year, North Vietnam launched the first large-scale conventional attacks...
