Extending Grace to One Another 1 Marriage: Contentment on the Desert Lap of the Journey The journey of life takes you across many different terrains, with symbolic resemblance to those of our mother earth. Depending on the country or city, most marathon runners get a little glimpse of the different land forms. Some go through valleys and hills, plains and mountains with varying levels of vegetation, ranging from arid to semi-arid to a thick rain forest. All these varieties of land forms with their respective types of vegetation have their own unique characteristics that exude beauty in their unique likenesses. Along the tracks through these routes, if one takes a pause and smells the roses and observes the beauty of the scenery, one will see that life flourishes through it all if we look for its beauty and admire its nuances. Our needs for sustenance and other things remain the same, but unfortunately each terrain offers different forms of sustenance. Being used to one particular terrain and its delicacies and beauties sometimes keeps us so attached to it that we always want to get stacked with it. As the saying goes, familiarity breeds contempt and that explains why we get complacent...
