Mittal Publications, New Delhi, 2007. N.A. Condition: New. xvi, 188 p., [8] p. of plates : ill. ,The Naga Legislature emerged only in 1964 when the politics of Nagaland was on hot-bed due to armed struggle between the Naga 'freedom fighters' and the Indian armed personnel. Though the Constitution of India contained democratic processes for Nagaland, these could not be given trial due to boycott of the Naga people in support of their demand for sovereignty and independence. The division in the cadre of the Naga Nationalist Council (NNC) and talks of the moderate Naga leaders with the Government of india resulted in creation of De-facto Naga Legislature in 1957, which ultimately created the favourable circumstance for creation of Nagaland State in 1963. The legislative processes began in Nagaland with the composition of the first Naga Legislature in February 1964 and it started to work for the people's development and set the state towards peace and prosperity. The involvement of the Speakers in party politics and their inclination towards the Government has created doubts and suspicion in the mind of the Opposition members. Moreover, the mushroom growth of political parties devoid of proper principles and ideologies, politics of defection and frequent formation of coalition governments and also entrance of the men of mafia groups in Legislatures have created numerous problems for the Speakers in India. The adjournment of the House sine-die due to pandemonium created by irresponsible Legislators has become the common features all over the country from Central Parliament of the State Legislatures. In case of Nagaland, it has been observed that unlimited ambition for power, prestige and wealth among the Naga politicians, has very much maligned the image of Naga politics where defection and counter-defection have freely been allowed to topple down the government for personal causes. However,...
