Excerpt: .good wine, my young friend, said Essendine, and good wine needs no bosh, such as you are talking now. What a fellow you are! said Owen; everything is bosh to you that is not plain and practical. Then I must think you bosh, for you are neither the one nor the other. No, my son, exuberance in you is natural, and I like to listen to it. Well, it was good wine; and how well that man in the red beard sang that song: tinued, waving his hand in the direction of the villa, I suppose you are wrapt in slumber by this time. Sleep, my little one; sleep, my pretty one, sleep! The effect of the Madeira is surprising; you are positively poetical, my dear Owen, with love and wine at once oppressed. By the way we have not spoken of Miss Fleetwood...
