Hull, and to prepare for a North Western Campaign. Coni sulting with Major Stoddard. And shewing him copies of the letters] had written to the Secretary of War, wherein I had proposed a plan and arrangement of the ensuing campaign, viz. Asking him for six. Thousand men, as a necessary force to take Malden, to make a proper impression on the govern ment of Upper Canada, and effectually to check the power both of their Militia and Indian forces; and indeed to capture the whole British army, drive their lleet into the lake, and Completely subdue that province - To this end, I urged the appointment of General Harrison to the command, as well on account of his great popularity, as of his military talents. [see my letters to the Secretary, dated e8th and soth August, and 3d September, Appendix No. Major Stoddard, ex amining all these points with the mind and eye of a soldier, pronounced them Correct; and we immediately commenced providing the necessary munitions of war. It was deemed expedient to prepare five eighteen-pounders, seven twelves, six nines, six sixes, and four howitzers. ve sent on to this City for artificers, to Juniata for iron, and to the fields for dry girdled trees for the cheeks of our gun carriages. - We soon discovered that the Secretary had adopted the plan I had suggested he made a requisition on the states of...
