Let it always be turned in the direction of excellence. That is, let the particular work in hand always be done in the best form in which it is capable of being rendered. This, too, for the sake of the editorial stad . A vast deal of the drudgery of all occupations may be overcome by the process of taking an interest in what is being done. It is dreary work to follow a humdrum speaker; it is still more dreary to transcribe his commonplace utterances. But if you have managed to render his speech as he ought to have uttered it, you have accomplished something to the advantage of the speaker and the benefit of the readers of the journal - perchance also for the future historian. The point of all this is that to the young reporter...
