Excerpt from Centralization by Construction and Interpretation of the Constitution: An Address Delivered in the Assembly Chamber, Capitol, Albany, N. Y., Before the New York State Bar Association, at Its Thirtieth Annual Meeting, January 15th, 1907, and Reprinted From the Thirtieth Annual Report of the Proceedings of the Association These utterances cannot in the least be minimized by opposing to them the personnel of their authors, for the one has achieved the highest success at a bar where competition is the greatest, and has with phenomenal rapidity won an international reputation as a diplomat which lifts him to the exalted plane of his great predecessor; and the other, for character and ability, is held in higher esteem, both, in America and abroad, than any other living man. Those who oppose their doctrines cannot answer them by arrogating to themselves a higher patriotism, for the one has, that he might serve his country, abandoned professional emoluments that few men in any age have had to sacrifice and what yet fewer would have the courage and self-denial to sacrifice. The other, inspired with the deepest moral sincerity, and a passion for righteousness, is as it were, constantly burning with a rage almost divine to advance his country's standard to the highest excellence.
