Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1869 Excerpt: .his mind. I feel convinced, my young friend, that you should tread in your father s footsteps, and become a preacher of the gospel. Then he pointed out to him the religious wants of the day--what a lack there was of evangelical teaching--how few eminent ministers there were both within and without the Established Church--and, kneeling down, implored that God, whom he believed had led him to speak thus, would consider his young friend faithful, putting him into the ministry, and make him a burning and a shining light. Qualified for the ministry, both by natural gifts and religious character, and having enjoyed for two years the classical instruction of Dr Valpy, of Reading, he entered Hoxton Academy. Whilst there, he was a great favourite. He enjoyed the especial esteem and love of his tutor, Dr Simpson, who remarked to a friend, That young man will be a burning and...
