Humphreys and others. possible so to do, however inartificially the will maybe expressed, and to make such a construction as will effectuate that intention. This is often a difficult task; for, as Lord Northington remarks, it is the fate of all courts of justice upon wills to be the authorized interpreters of nonsense, and to find the meaning of persons that had no meaning at all. The intention is to be collected, not from any particular or detached clause of the will, but from the whole taken together, and from any codicil which forms a part of it. Every word is to have its effect, provided an effect can be given to it not inconsistent with the general intent of the whole will taken together, for a testator is not to be supposed to have used words without meaning, if it is possible to give them a consistent meaning; and the rule is not to reject any words, unless there can not be any rational construction of these words as they stand. Ward on Legacy, p. 100. It has been well said, that the intention of the testator is the polar star that should always guide in the interpretation of a will, and when this intention is distinctly announced in plain and intelligible language in the instrument itself, it...
