Excerpt: . . . OBSERVATIONS ON THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND. SECT. XXIJ, T7E left the scenes of Inverary with re-1 gret; those scenes, in which the grand and beautiful are as harmoniously combined as we almost in any place remembered to have seen them. We approached it through magnificent woods; and we left it through a succession of lake-scenery, still more magnificent. Ten miles we travelled along the confines of Loch-Fyne, skirting that grand opening, which it forms to the north east. Its skreens are every where equal to the expanse of its waters. They are indeed chiefly Vol. ii. B naked, naked, and want some such munificent hand as we had just left, to spread a little sylvan drapery upon their bare, enormous sides. But what they lose in beauty, they gain in grandeur. Their situation also upon the lake operated as another cause, to impress the...
